“In West Virginia, we are suffering the pains of an evolving chemical industry. The continual migration of manufacturing jobs overseas, and soaring feedstock prices domestically, are creating a significant strain on one of West Virginia’s traditional core industries. Thankfully, leaders at MATRIC, along with the Governor’s Office, are working to find ways to preserve as many of these good-paying jobs as possible. We know that, if given the opportunity, highly educated and skilled workers will choose to stay in West Virginia. I commend all those working today to see those opportunities emerge, and I stand ready to be of assistance, if at all possible.”
